(Oniscidea, Isopoda) from the Kermadec Ridge, New Zealand. The carotenoid composition of the deep-sea shrimp Sarcoptes aculeatus (L.) (Oniscidea, Sarcopterygii) and the deep-sea isopod Scopodes tuberculatus (L.) (Oniscidea, Isopoda) were analysed by high-performance liquid chromatography (HPLC). Ascariosides were found in the exuviae of both species and used for the taxonomic identification. The carotenoid pigments of S. aculeatus were identified as siphonaxanthins (siphonaxanthin I, IV, V and VI), β -carotene, 13-cis- β -carotene, α -carotene, and lutein. The carotenoid composition of S. tuberculatus was dominated by siphonaxanthins (I, II, III, VI and VII) and astaxanthin. It contained also β -carotene, α -carotene, lutein and violaxanthin, but no 13-cis- β -carotene. The results indicate that the carotenoid pigments of the two species are distinct. This is the first report of siphonaxanthins in deep-sea animals.The importance of this pattern, first noticed in an earlier essay, is that it can be used as a way to demonstrate the existence of a concept with an unusual property. That unusual property is, surprisingly, the tendency to come in pairs. This is a property that, if you asked a good question about it, you would expect to be a requirement. And if it is not true, you should expect that the concept to which the pattern belongs has a strange property. Let's see what happens when 82157476af
